CHICAGO POLICE CASE

2 The U.S. Justice Department will open an investigation into the Chicago Police Department after protests over how it handled the case of a black teenager shot by a white police officer, a person familiar with the matter said. The civil probe, which will determine whether the department systematically violates constitutional rights, follows murder charges being filed against the police officer in the October 2014 killing. The shooting was caught on videotape, which was not released until the charges were filed on Nov. 25. REUTERS

BOSTON FATAL SHOOTING

4 Boston police have arrested three men in connection with a Saturday night shooting on the South Boston/Dorchester line that left a man dead. The arrests came after police found a man suffering from gunshot wounds around 10:30 p.m. Saturday night, according to a police report. The victim was later pronounced dead, police said. SPENCER BUELL

BOMB SCARE HOAX

5 A Lawrence man is due in court this week after police said he planted a suitcase next to a Homeland Security vehicle on Friday, touching off a downtown bomb threat investigation. Police believe James Derepentigny, 50, was the man caught on camera leaving a flowery suitcase near the car on Atlantic Avenue before quickly walking away from the scene. Derepentigny has a history of mental illness, police said. He is charged with planting a hoax device and could be arraigned as early as Monday in Boston Municipal Court. METRO

Keolis: Ask us anything

MBTA commuter rail Keolis is taking your questions from 2-4 p.m. Wednesday in a Reddit AMA.

SPENCER BUELL
@MetroBOS
spencer.buell@metro.us

The commuter rail is taking to Reddit this week to answer riders' questions in an "Ask Me Anything" Q&A.

Top brass from Keolis Commuter Services, which runs the rail, will be taking queries on the site from 2-4 p.m. on Wednesday, a company spokesman confirmed for Metro. General Manager Gerald Francis, Deputy GM Franck Dubourdieu and others from the Keolis management team plan to be on hand to chime in.

"Ask Me Anything" sessions, also known as AMAs, let users post questions in online threads to be answered in real time.

Commuter rail passengers at South Station. NICOLAUS CZARNECKI

President Barack Obama and Boston Mayor Marty Walsh have both done them.

Earlier this year, an anonymous MBTA bus driver was featured in an AMA, answering queries on everything from T management and unruly passengers to how much drivers like it when you say "thanks."

Keolis spokesman Mac Daniel told Metro that the company's customer service team came up with the idea to host an AMA of its own, and that Keolis sees it as an extension of its "Meet the Managers" events in T stations, which it has held a few times a year since it took over the rail in 2014.

"Passengers are our customers. We want them to feel they have a voice, whether it be complaints or praise," Daniel said in an email.

There is a lot to discuss. T officials have floated the possibility of cutting commuter rail service on the weekend. A decision is coming soon on a fare increase in 2016. A commuter rail schedule change set to take effect in late 2015 was recently delayed after it was met with opposition from lawmakers and riders.

And of course, all eyes are on the MBTA as winter approaches after last year's T-snarling snowfall.

"I take the commuter rail every day. And it's both my savior and living nightmare at the same time. Should be interesting," wrote one user going by username MrFusionHER.

Said another, with username jax12007: "This is a dumpster fire waiting to happen."

Some commenters raised concerns because the AMA is scheduled to happen when many commuters are at work.

Daniel, the Keolis spokesman, said the thread would be open for questions both before and after the 2-4 p.m. window.

"We'll check the thread after and try to answer some stray questions where possible," he told Metro.

Boston-area firefighters train for collapses at Moon Island

About 40 firefighters from departments around Boston headed to Moon Island this past weekend for training on how to respond to the threat of a collapse.

First-responders from Boston, Cambridge, Chelsea, Quincy and Brookline were at the Boston Fire Academy, where on Sunday they hauled half-ton slabs of concrete and practiced using drills, supports for walls and torches designed to cut through metal.

Boston Fire Commissioner Joe

Finn surveyed the training Sunday afternoon, and his department tweeted out a series of pictures offering a look behind the scenes.

"You never know when catastrophes are going to happen,"

BFD spokesman Steve MacDonald told Metro. "You never stop training and there are always new and improved ways to do things."

Fire officials, he said, are always looking for dangers in places most Bostonians never have to.

"Take any number of parking garages in the city. If they collapsed, some people would be in cars, pinned in with concrete on top of them. How would we get them out?" he said. "These are all drills we do that have a practical application in the real world."

Help Metro make magic

Please donate to the Metro Magic annual holiday toy drive during the 2015 holiday season.

In keeping with the holiday spirit of giving, Metro is once again launching Tony's Metro Magic, our annual toy drive for underprivileged children in Boston, New York and Philadelphia.

This year marks the seventh anniversary of the toy drive, which was renamed in memory of the man who oversaw the project for more than four years, Tony Metcalf, Metro's longest-running editor-in-chief. Metcalf passed away in 2013 from colon cancer at the age of 50.

Metcalf lit up every year as he saw the faces of children unwrap their holiday gifts. It is our goal to keep that magic alive. We are now asking readers to contribute what they can to Tony's Metro Magic.

Metro has created a wish list at the Target website that readers can access by going to www.metro.us and clicking on the Tony's Metro Magic logo.

From there, just choose the toys you wish to donate, pay online using Target's secure payment system. Your gifts, along with your name attached, will be delivered to Metro's offices in each city.

This season we hope you will remember the children who will spend the holidays in shelters or who may not have gifts to open. Even one small gift can make a big difference in a child's holiday season. METRO

Obama reassures nation in Oval Office speech

The speech marks Obama's third official address to the nation from the Oval Office.

President Barack Obama told Americans on Sunday night what the government is doing to keep them safe following the mass killing by a couple in California last week that is being investigated as an act of terrorism.

In a rare Oval Office address, Obama laid out the security steps the United States has taken since Islamic State's Nov. 13 assaults in Paris that killed 130 people. Obama said during a recent visit by French President Francois Hollande to the White House after the Paris attacks that the United States and its coalition would step up efforts to counter Islamic State, or ISIL.

Obama also said he will use "every single aspect of American power" to destroy the militant group.

"We will prevail by being strong and smart, resilient and relentless," Obama said.

Obama also gave an update on the investigation of U.S.-born Syed Rizwan Farook, 28, and his Pakistani wife, Tashfeen

Malik, 29, in the San Bernardino shooting. He said the couple went down "the dark path of radicalization."

Obama said there was no evidence the "San Bernardino killers" were directed by any terrorist organization.

The president also said that the U.S. would not be drawn into a ground war in Syria and Iraq.

"That's exactly what groups like ISIL want," Obama said, calling it a "cult of death."

The president called on Muslims to confront interpretations of Islam that lead to violence.

But, he said, "it is the responsibility of Americans of every faith to reject discrimination" against Muslims.

"When we travel down that road, we lose," Obama said. REUTERS/METRO

There's officially a new Kardashian to keep up with, as Kim Kardashian and Kanye West welcomed their second child, a boy, Saturday in Los Angeles. Of course, if you subscribe to Kardashian's website or downloaded her app, you already knew that because she posted an excited, all-caps announcement over the weekend revealing that

Christmas with the 'Krampus'

If you loved "Bad Santa" and "Gremlins," you'll want to check out "Krampus." GETTY IMAGES

Adam Scott wants to scare your kids but not his own.

NED EHRBAR
@Nedrick
ned.ehrbar@metro.us

Adam Scott loves an off-beat take on a Christmas movie. It's a big part of why the actor was keen to star in "Krampus," the family horror film about Santa's demonic counterpart who terrorizes the naughty. "A Christmas Story" is one of my favorites, as is 'Bad Santa' and 'Elf' and 'Gremlins,'" Scott says. "And I think this really would sit well in a Christmas film festival with those movies."

What was your reaction when you first heard about the film?

Michael Dougherty and I got together, and before I had read the script, he just told me he wanted to make a movie in the vein of the '80s Amblin movies that we both had grown up on like "Poltergeist," "Gremlins," "E.T." and "Goonies." And that just got me excited because those are my favorite movies.

Why do you think those kinds of movies don't get made as much anymore?

I guess at a certain point the genres became much more starkly defined. You have to have either a hard horror movie or a kids movie. You watch "Poltergeist" now, and I'm struck by how much it plays out like the movie "Parenthood" or something, a very natural, character-driven story, and then the supernatural element steps in. "Gremlins" has this touch of comedy — it has these real character moments in it that you don't see as much in horror movies anymore. The PG-13 horror movie is something that we really haven't seen in a long time.

You're right, everything is very much strictly in genre boxes.

And "The Dark Crystal," I can't imagine showing "The Dark Crystal" to my kids because they've grown up on kids' movies that are so safe and free of anything resembling peril that it would scare the s—t out of them if I showed them "The Dark Crystal." They're just so not conditioned for that kind of tone that it would freak them out.

Have you explained the legend of Krampus to your kids yet?

No, they're a little young. But they were there in New Zealand when we were shooting the movie, so they saw Krampus, and they saw all the scary snowmen and everything. But I didn't really tell them the backstory because I feel like it would scare the s—t out of them.

Dreaming of a boring Christmas

How does this movie's rather terrible extended family experience compare to your own?

I've never really had a bad Christmas experience. I grew up in a happy household, so we never really had that. I think everybody gets a burnout at a certain point with the holidays and all, being crammed into a hot room eating Christmas dinner. There's a certain point where everyone's ready to move on from the holidays. But I never had one of those nightmare Christmases myself.

From homeless to Harvard

& jobs education

Engineering saved
David Boone's life.

RAQUEL LANERI
@RaquelLaneri
raquel.laneri@metro.us

Growing up in Cleveland, David Boone was always a "tinkerer."

"I liked to mess with things and take things apart and fix them, but I never knew exactly what that meant," says the 22-year-old. It wasn't until he stepped into an information session at a new STEM-focused high school, called MC2 STEM, that he even heard of the term "engineering."

"There were no engineers in my community," says Boone. "And being a smart kid, people always told me to be a doctor or a lawyer. But when I visited this school, and they talked about engineering, I knew it was something that fit my personality."

Thanks to that info session, Boone is now studying computer engineering at Harvard, with a job lined up as a data scientist at Microsoft after he graduates this month.

His path hasn't been an easy one. Before he started high school, his family — mom, four siblings and a baby nephew — lost their home.

Boone spent most of the next four years bouncing from house to house, essentially homeless. And once he did enroll in Harvard, insecurities about being an affirmative action student, about not belonging, plagued him.

Boone was recently at a conference in Washington for STEM education. We spoke with him afterward about how engineering has changed his life.

How did going to a STEM-focused school inspire you?

I was in the first class, which was exciting, because we got to shape it and direct it ourselves. At first I thought I wanted to be a doctor, but being at the school really got me excited about engineering. Freshman year, we're going to the Great Lakes Science

A new kind of school

MC2 — where Boone attended school — is now one of 27 STEM "ecosystems" throughout the country. These high schools stress self-directed learning and connect students with museums, businesses and universities to show how they can apply STEM in their lives and careers.

Center, and we're learning about wind turbines, and there's this massive wind turbine right outside. You could see the contraptions of the wind turbine actually working. That was an awesome thing. Or sophomore year, we're on campus at General Electric and shadowing the engineers there. We even got to interact with some of the executives.

You were previously homeless — can you talk a bit about that?

The summer right before I started high school, we, my family, lost our home. Then my mother lost her job, and things kind of just spiraled. So I entered ninth grade very afraid to tell anyone at school what was going on, because I didn't want family services involved. So, I just kind of floated for a while. I would stay late at school and volunteer to give tours so I could get free food. Eventually, the principal started putting pieces together, and he figured out I was homeless and actually invited me into his home. I was there for a year — that was probably my best academic year to date. But now my mother owns a home, and things are much better now.

What's next for you?

I graduate in December, and I accepted a full-time offer with Microsoft as a data scientist — moving across the country! I'm working with a couple of startups now. But eventually, I want to be an entrepreneur, and I'm always looking for ways to learn what that means, what that road map looks like. But what I'm learning is that it doesn't have any more of a road map than getting into Harvard, but there are things you can do to move in the right direction.

Do you have any advice for kids or teens like you?

Going to Harvard doesn't fix everything, but all the experiences you have will make you a lot smarter and a lot stronger. They made me understand myself more, and I think they're preparing me for what comes next.

Patriots shocked by Eagles

New England nearly overcame a 21-point deficit Sunday afternoon, but fell for a second straight loss.

EVAN MACY
@evan_macy
evan.macy@metro.us

It was wild. After three weeks of perhaps the most punishing, depressing and hopeless chatter in Philadelphia, the Eagles finally showed up. Oh yeah, and it was against Tom Brady and the defending champion Patriots.

Malcolm Jenkins had a lot to say earlier this week about the Eagles' recent struggles. In Sunday's 35-28 victory against the Patriots, he said it with his play, picking off Brady in the end zone in the third quarter and taking it 100 yards to the house to put Philly ahead. He was joined in big-play heroics by Darren Sproles, who was not only the featured back in the Eagles' offensive scheme he also returned his second punt of the year for a score, 83 yards in a big third quarter for the Birds.

Brady, on the other hand, (29 of 56, 310 yards, 3 TDs and 2 INTs) the leading candidate for league MVP heading into the game, appeared lost at times, making several costly throws that resulted in turnovers or three-and-outs. He did, however, lead New England on a comeback march that nearly tied things with just seconds left.

The Patriots had no answer for Darren Sproles, who had 96 yards of offense in addition to his punt return touchdown. GETTY IMAGES

With Philly ahead by three scores, New England cut the lead to 14 with a touchdown pass to Scott Chandler midway through the fourth. New England also recovered a Philadelphia fumble a few plays later to begin to mount their comeback try.

With four minutes to go, Brady found James White for 25 yards on a key fourth-and-12 conversion to keep the Pats in the game. One play later, he snuck into the end zone to cut the deficit to a single score.

The Pats recovered a fumble with a minute left (a Kenjon Barner run that could have sealed the deal) and completed a few passes before a fourth-and-10 pass hit the turf and ended the game.

Philly's offense did just enough, collecting 248 yards on 58 plays, in comparison to New England's 427 on 86 plays.

The Eagles held their own in the first quarter, putting pressure on Brady defensively and moving the ball with ease on offense. But the Birds committed five penalties and were unable to score, and eventually the Pats broke through, thanks in part to a big Scott Chandler reception to set up a little 4-yard touchdown dink to James White early in the second.

After the Eagles once

again failed to piece together a viable drive, the Patriots seized control of the game using a potent, up the gut running game to set up Danny Amendola, wide open in the end zone on an 11-yard Brady strike to put the Pats up 14-0.

After four punts on their first four drives the Eagles took advantage of a short field (after a Patriots failed onside kick) with Sam Bradford firing on all cylinders. After finding Jordan Matthews for 20 yards early in the drive, the QB, back after missing two starts with a concussion and shoulder injury, found Zach Ertz in the middle of the end zone. The deficit was cut in half, 14-7.

Chip Kelly aggressively used his timeouts as the first half waned, and for once, a Kelly decision paid off as Chris Maragos blocked a Patriots punt with 15 seconds left. It was returned to the house by Najee Goode to tie things at 14 after the first 30 minutes.

With the Patriots driving in the third, Brady threw his first-ever interception against the Eagles, as New England fell behind (as the Eagles took their first lead in nine quarters of football), and a drive later punted to Sproles, who ran it back 83 yards.

A rare 36-yard Danny Amendola-to-Brady completion stopped the bleeding for a moment, but shortly after Brady threw another pick in the end zone, this one to a cherry-picking Byron Maxwell.
